Maketa Wilborn is an educator, graphic facilitator, drummer and performing artist. In addition to his work with New Wilderness Project, he also manages his own consulting practice - Maketa Wilborn Consulting. He works around the country as an organizational development consultant designing and facilitating equity and diversity trainings, team building, and strategic visioning and planning retreats. He is a facilitator for Source Consulting Group and an associate of The Grove Consultants International. Maketa has worked as a naturalist and graduate student trainer at Islandwood, an environmental education school in Washington State. He is also an avid snow boarder.

Benjie Howard is an educator and performing artist. In addition to his work with New Wilderness Project, he is a river guide and wilderness educator in Grand Canyon. He has guided over 100 expeditions on the Colorado River. He's a singer-songwriter currently working on his second full-length album. He has been working for over 20 years using music and outdoor experiences as primary tools in the work of building relationships across cultural differences, repairing broken connections to the landscape, drawing attention to inequities in education and society at large, and looking toward sustainability and social justice. He is also an avid whitewater kayaker and downhill mountain biker.
